v.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR

HIGH COURT MALAYA, KUALA LUMPUR
DATO' K.C. VOHRAH J
[CRIMINAL APPEAL NO: 42-5-96]
24 SEPTEMBER 1996

HOUSING DEVELOPERS: Housing development - Meaning of - Appellant constructing 12 units of apartments for own use - Whether engaged in "housing development" - Whether appellant a "housing developer" - Whether licence required - Housing Developers (Control and Licensing) Act 1966 ss. 3, 5(1).

INTERPRETATION: Housing Developers (Control and Licencing) Act 1966 - Section 5 - Undertaking housing development without a licence - Whether a strict liability offence - Subsection 9 to s. 7A - Whether spelling new definition for "housing development".

WORDS & PHRASES: "Housing development" - Housing Developers (Control and Licencing) Act 1966 s. 3.

The appellant was charged with an offence under s. 5(1), Housing Developers (Control and Licensing) Act 1966 (the Act), for engaging in, or alternatively, for carrying on or causing to be undertaken housing development without a licence being issued under the Act. It was not in dispute that the appellant had constructed 12 units of apartments on lot 789, Jalan Dungun, Kuala Lumpur, and that no licence had been issued in respect of the construction. The facts also showed, however, that the appellant had built the said apartments not for sale but purely for use as its staff quarters. This being the case, in the Court below, the appellant argued that it had not in law engaged in "housing development" as that term was defined in 3 of the Act, and so had not contravened the said s. 5(1). The learned Sessions Judge nonetheless found the appellant guilty as charged, ruling that the offence under s. 5 was a strict liability offence. The appellant has appealed against the conviction and fine imposed.

Held:

[1] The Housing Developers (Control and Licensing) Act 1966 is a piece of social legislation to protect house purchasers in their relationship with housing developers. The legislation is aimed at two principal and necessary parties, i.e. the purchasers of houses who have to be protected, and the developers who intend to build or are building houses for sale from whom the purchasers are to be protected. It is in this context that the three definitions of "housing accomodation", "housing developer" and "housing development" ought to be looked at.

[2] The definition of "housing development", as that term was defined prior to the coming into force of the amending Act A703, envisaged two essential parties as being involved as a result of the development, i.e.the developer who built more than four units of housing accomodation for sale, and the purchasers of such units.

[3] The definition of "housing development" underwent a change with the amendment introduced by Act A703. The fact remains, however, that the new definition still envisaged two essential parties to the situation, namely the seller (i.e the developer) and the purchasers. The first part of the definition, through the three limbs therein, for instance, envisaged the presence of purchasers of the housing accomodation and the sale of more than four units of housing accomodation to the purchasers, while the second part, flowing as it was from the first part, was obviously aimed at protecting house purchasers from the landowner who has collected down payments on the sale of houses yet to be built and who later disappeared.

[4] In the light of the aforesaid, contextually, there is a purposed scheme in the definition of "housing development" involving three elements, namely the act of building (in the sense of building housing accomodation), the building of four units of housing accomodation and the sale of the units. Effectively, the scheme also envisages four situations viz. (i) the sale of more than four units of housing accomodation by the developer before he even builds the units (ii) the building of more than four units of housing accomodation for the purpose of sale where no money has yet been collected from purchasers of housing accomodation (iii) the building of more than four units of housing accomodation where money is collected for the sale of such units and (iv) the carrying on of any building operations for the purpose of erecting more than four units a of housing accomodation for the purpose of sale.

[5] It is untenable to argue that subsection 9 to s. 7A shows the intention of new definition of "housing development", or that the introduction of s. 7 A were meant to catch within the ambit of the Act who those built more than four units of housing accomodation without any regard to their intention as to the purpose of building them.

[6] The conclusion is irresistable that the appellant company was not guilty of the offence charged with. The offence is not of strict liability offence. The company was building apartments for its staff, not for sale, and it therefore did not require a licence so to do under the Act.

JUDGMENT

K.C. Vohrah J:

The appellant is a company where the major shareholders are foreigners. It is engaged in consultancy and construction works in Malaysia. It is not disputed that the appellant constructed a building in its land, Lot 789, Jalan Dungun, Bukit Damansara which consists of 12 units of apartments.

It is also not disputed that the said building was at all material times intended by the appellant to be used as its staff quarters. It was meant to house its expatriate staff there; there was no intention for any of the units of apartments to be sold.

Section 5(1) (as amended by Act A 703 of 1988) of the Housing Developers (Control and Licensing) Act 1966 reads:

> 5(1) No housing development shall be engaged in, carried on, undertaken or caused to be undertaken except by a housing developer in possession of a licence issued under the Act.

The appellant was charged in the alternative for either engaging in, carrying on or causing to be undertaken housing development without being in possession of a licence issued under the Act.

It was the prosecution's case that the appellant was a "housing developer" as defined under s. 3 of the Act and that it was either engaged in, carrying on or causing to be undertaken "housing development" as defined under s. 3 of the Act and that it had no licence to build the 12 units of apartments.

The appellant's defence was that while it did engage in constructing the said building it did not engage in "housing development" as defined under s. 3 of the Act as it never had any intention to sell any of the units of apartments it was building.

The Sessions Court ruled that the offence under s. 5 was a strict liability offence and that the appellant had carried on housing development without it being in possession of a licence under s. 5 of the Act. The appellant was convicted and fined RM65,000.

The appeal was against conviction and sentence. I allowed the appeal and set aside the conviction.

In Halsbury's Laws of England, 4 Edn., Vol. 44 para. 856 relating to the object of all interpretation of a written instrument, this principle, culled from many case precedents cited therein succintly, state that the object is to discover the intention of the author as expressed in the instrument. In relation to a statute this is stated:

> The dominant purpose in construing a statute is to ascertain the intention of the legislature expressed in the stature, considering it as a whole and in the context.

The preamble to the Housing Developers (Control and Licensing Act) 1966 states that the Act is an Act to provide "for the control and licensing of the business of housing development in West Malaysia and for matters connected therewith". From this we know that the business of housing development is required to be controlled and licensed. In the definition section (s. 3) several expressions are defined but the key expressions are "housing developer", "purchaser" and "housing development" showing that these expressions are used in the Act frequently and more importantly that they are inextricably linked in the business of housing development. In fact throughout the Act the scheme is to control the relationship between the "housing developer" who carries on the business of "housing development" and the "purchaser", the person who purchases a house or an apartment put up under the housing development.

Section 7A requires every licensed housing developer to open and maintain a Housing Development Account (see subsection (1)) into which purchase monies received by the developer for "the sale of housing accommodation in the housing development ..." have to be paid into (see subsection (3)). The other subsections regulate how the account is to be operated and used. What is to be emphasised is that every licensed housing developer has to open such an account. Why is there the need for a statutory requirement for such an account (where purchase monies have to be paid into) if as the prosecution argue, the Act is also to regulate a person who builds houses which he is not intending to sell to purchasers and therefore is not expecting any purchase money? The provision is obviously to protect the interests of the purchasers where moneys are collected before the houses are completed having regard to subsection (a) which states that s. 7A shall apply to any housing development carried on by a licensed housing developer where all housing accommodation in the housing development "will not be offered for sale and purchase before the completion of the housing development."

Then, again, s. 10(2) allows the Minister to direct the Controller of Housing to investigate into the affairs of or into the accounting or other records of any housing developer if the Minister has reason to believe that the housing developer "is carrying on his business in a manner detrimental to the purchasers ..." (paragraph (b)) or if on application for such an investigation is made to him and "every such investigation shall be supported by not less than five purchasers ..." The emphasis again is on safeguarding the interests of the purchasers.

The link between the purchasers and the developer in relation to the housing development and the obvious supervisory part played by the Minister and his officials to protect the interests of the purchasers can be seen in s. 11 which allows the Minister to give direction under s. 12 "for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the purchasers of the housing developer ..." where the licensed housing developer is unable to meet his obligations to his purchasers.

The recurring theme of safeguarding the interest of the purchasers being of paramount importance appears in s. 24(1). It gives power to the Minister to make regulations for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Act and the regulations made may "prescribe the form or forms of contracts which shall be used by a licensed housing developer, his agent, nominee or purchaser ..." (see paragraph (c)), "regulate payments ... which may be made by a purchaser before, during or after the construction of the house, flat or other accommodation ... " (see paragraph (d)), "regulate and prohibit the conditions and terms of any contract between a licensed housing developer ... and his purchaser" (see paragraph (e)).

Quite clearly the Housing Developers (Control and Licensing) Act 1966 is a piece of social legislation to protect house purchasers in their relationship with housing developers. This was underscored by Suffian LP in the Supreme Court case of Housing Development Corporation Sdn. Bhd. v. Lee Poh Choo [1982] 2 MLJ 31 at 34 when he explained why certain paragraphs in r. 12 made under the Act could not be allowed to be circumvented:

> It is common knowledge that in recent years, especially when government started giving housing loans making it possible for public servants to borrow money at 4% interest to buy houses, there was an upsurge in demand for housing, and that to protect home buyers, most of whom are people of modest means, from rich and powerful developers, Parliament found it necessary to regulate the sale of houses and protect buyers by enacting the Act ...

This view, of the purpose of the Act was echoed by V.C. George J (as he then was) in Khau Daw Yau v. Kin Nam Realty Development Sdn. Bhd. [1983) 1 MLJ 335 at 341:

> The scheme of the Housing Developers (Control and Licensing) Act 1966 and of the Rules of 1970 is to provide a measure of protection to purchasers of housing accommodation in a housing development against unscrupulous developers.

That the purpose of the said Act is to protect house buyers was again observed by Azmi FJ (as he then was) in City Investment Sdn. Bhd. v. Koperasi Serbaguna Cuepacs Tanggungan Bhd. [1985] 1 MLJ 285 at 290. And Lord Templeman had this to say when the case went as appeal to the Privy Council [1988] 1 SCR 122 at:

> [The Act] is clearly designed to protect purchasers from developers, and these purchasers need protection whether the sites are sold before or contemporaneously with and after completion of the houses.

To be noted is that the legislation is aimed at two principal and necessary parties. Firstly, there are the purchasers of houses who have to be protected. Secondly, there are the sellers i.e., the developers who intend to build or are building houses for sale, from whom the purchasers are to be protected.

And it is in this context that the three definitions, "housing accommodation", "housing developer" and "housing development", will have to be looked at.

Under s. 3 of the Act:

"Housing accommodation" includes any building, tenement or messuage which is wholly or principally constructed, adapted or intended for human habitation or partly for human habitation and partly for business premises.

Under s. 3 of the Act, "housing developer" (amended by A 703 in 1988) means "any person, body of persons, company, firm or society (by whatever name described), who or which engages in or carries on or undertakes or causes to be undertaken a housing development".

It is pertinent to see how "housing development" was defined before amending Act A 703 came into force in 1988. It is this:

> "Housing development" means the business of developing or providing monies for developing or purchasing or of partly developing and partly providing monies for purchasing, more than four units of housing accommodation which will be or are erected by such development; and for the purposes of this definition "develop" means to construct or cause to be constructed, and includes the carrying on of any building operations for the purpose of constructing housing accommodation in, on, over or under any land with the view of selling the same or the land which would be appurtenant to such housing accommodation.

It will be noticed that this definition although loose and ambiguous did envisage two essential parties as being involved as a result of the development, viz, on the one hand, the developer who built more than four units of housing accommodation for sale and on the other, the purchasers of such units.

In 1988 with the amendment introduced by A 703 this definition underwent a change and the less than elegant language reads thus:

> "Housing development" means to develop or construct or cause to be constructed in any manner more than four units of housing accommodation and includes the collection of monies or the carrying on of any building operations for the purpose of erecting housing accommodation in, on, over or under any land; or the sale of more than four units of housing lots by the landowner or his nominee with the view of constructing more than four units of housing accommodation by the said landowner or his nominee.

The second part of the definition gives an indication of the first part of the definition.

The second part of the definition envisages the situation where a landowner or his nominee sells more than four units of housing lots where the units of housing accommodation have yet to be built; the landowner or his nominee sells the lots with the view of constructing more than four units of housing accommodation. The second part of the definition is obviously aimed at protecting house purchasers from the landowner who collects down payments on the sale of houses yet to be built and who disappears after collecting the down payments. But again there are two essential parties to the situation, the seller i.e., the developer on the one hand and the purchasers on the other.

Contextually and on the basis of a reasonable interpretation does not the second part of the definition flow from the first part and both are meant to cover the same two essential parties?

As to the first part, it has to be noticed that it encompasses three limbs which fall within the definition of "housing development" and all three limbs have left certain matters unsaid. For example, the language in the second limb – "includes the collection of monies ... for the purpose of erecting housing accommodation in, on, over and under any land;" – does not state from whom the collection of monies has taken place. From partners of the firm undertaking housing development? That would not make sense; the collection must be from purchasers of the housing accommodation. Just any number of housing of housing accommodation? Obviously not, for, contextually, the housing accommodation must relate to more than four units.

As for the third limb, the definition "includes ... the carrying on of any building for the purpose of erecting hoasing accommodation operation in, on, over or under any land." Here again there is no number of units of housing accommodation specified. Surely, again, the units must be more than four. Are the units to be for sale although left unsaid similar to the situation in the the first limb? Contextually, having regard to the purpose and scheme of the Act it is not difficult to conclude that all the three limbs in the first part of the definition envisage the presence of purchasers of the housing accommodation and the sale of more than four units of housing accommodation to these purchasers.

To put in another way, I think it is not difficult to see a purposed scheme in the definition of "housing development" contextually in the light of what has been discussed so far and this involves three elements which are interlinked, a plan of purposed protection for purchasers from developers.

The first element relates to the act of building, in the sense of building or erecting housing accommodation. The second element relates to at least four units of housing accommodation being built. The third element must necessarily, in the context, relate to the sale of these units. In other words, the scheme envisages the following situations:

(1) The sale of more than four units of housing accommodation by the developer before he even builds the units.

This situation has reference to the second part of the definition of housing development i.e. "or the sale of more than four units of housing lots by the land owner or his nominee with the view of constructing more than four units of housing accommodation by the said land owner or his nominee.

(2) The building of more than four units of housing accommodation for the purpose of sale where no money has yet been collected from purchasers of the housing accommodation.

This relates to the first limb of the first part of the meaning, the primary meaning of the definition of housing accommodation i.e., "to develop or construct or cause to be constructed any manner more than four units of housing accommodation". Although the element of sale of the units of housing accommodation is not spelt out the only reasonable interpretation is that that has to be read in the context of the conceptual scheme of the definition. Here the intention is to build and sell but there is no offer to sell before the completion of the housing development.

(3) The building of more than four units of housing accommodation where money is collected for the sale of such units.

This situation has reference to the second limb of the first part of the definition of "housing development" where the meaning "includes ... the collection of monies for the purpose of erecting housing accommodation ..."

(4) The carrying on of any building operations for the purpose of erecting more than four units of housing accommodation for the purpose of sale.

This situation has reference to the first part of the definition of "housing development" where the third limb reads "and includes ... the carrying of any building operations for the purpose of erecting housing accommodation ..."

> Here contextually the element of sale of the units must be read into the definition otherwise any person carrying on any building operations whatsoever will be caught in the definition.

To be noted is that when Act A 703 amended the definition of "housing development" it also introduced, inter alia, a new section, s. 7A. This required every licensed housing developer to set up and maintain, as observed earlier, a Housing Development Account into which the purchase moneys received by the licensed housing developer from the sale of housing accommodation in the housing development had to be paid, except in the situation caught by subsection (9) of s. 7A. It has to be emphasised that while s. 9(A) states that the section does not apply where all the housing accommodation (of a licensed developer's housing development) will not be offered for sale and purchase before the completion of the housing development, the subsection – in fact s. 7A – does not provide for the situation where the building of housing accommodation is not for sale at all; meaning, if a person builds more than four units with no intention to sell he is not caught by s. 7A nor by the Act. It cannot be argued, as was done, that subsection (9) to s. 7A shows the intention of new definition of "housing development" and the introduction of s. 7A were meant to catch within the ambit of the Act those who built more than four units of housing accommodation without regard to their intention as to the purpose of building them.

The conclusion is irresistable – the appellant company was not guilty of the offence charged with. The offence is not a strict liability offence. The company was building apartments for its staff, not for sale and it therefore did not require a license so to do under the Act.

I therefore set aside the conviction and fine and ordered the fine to be refunded.
